

Chronic Non-communicable Diseases in Low and Middle-income Countries

Edited by Ama de-Graff Aikins and Charles Agyemang

Low- and middle-income countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America bear a significant proportion of the global burden of chronic non-communicable diseases, such as cardiovascular diseases, diabetes and cancers. The pattern persists in African and Asian migrant populations in European and North American countries, despite the higher standards of living and improved health infrastructure.

One of the first comprehensive collections of research, using systematic reviews of existing literature and reports of current research, interventions and policy initiatives, this book documents the key issues and highlights best practices and innovations in countries that have limited resources.

It thoroughly investigates cross-cutting themes such as the double burden of infectious and chronic non-communicable diseases, weak health systems, neglect of social determinants of non-communicable diseases, and a lack of political will in tackling complex public health problems. It moves beyond documenting problems and challenges to highlight best practices and innovations, and offers concrete models for developing appropriate research, intervention and policy for all health care researchers and practitioners struggling with the double burden of non-communicable and infectious diseases with minimal resources.
